Where do faculty and staff at UMSN go for support and information on how to address potentially difficult situations that involve colleagues or students?

First, we encourage you to communicate through difficult situations whenever possible directly with colleagues. For guidance, please follow the steps referenced on page 2. Steps include trusting your gut, de-personalizing, being positive, planning for the solution, and checking-in. If your first direct attempt at resolution was unsuccessful, reflect on what you might have done differently to improve the outcome and move forward your second attempt.

Second, if your direct communication efforts were unsuccessful we encourage you to schedule a consultation with the following UMSN resources for feedback or to explore additional pathways and resources for direct resolution. Each office varies in role and procedures and we encourage you to contact the office that is most appropriate based on the information described below. If you are still unclear about the best pathway for you feel free to reach out to any office for a referral.

Dr. Barbara Brush
UMSN Faculty Ombudsperson
brushb@umich.edu / 763-3218

The Faculty Ombudsperson is a confidential resource for faculty questions and concerns regarding how to address potentially difficult situations.

The Staff Ombudsperson offers confidential information, referrals, and answers for sensitive questions to support staff members to resolve concerns. This is a new University initiative.

1-800-SON-Talk
This is a hotline for students, faculty, and staff to report concerns related to diversity, equity, and inclusion; all matters will be handled with care and consideration for privacy requests to the extent possible.

Culture Champions
nursing.umich.edu/information/current-faculty-staff/culture-champions

The UMSN Culture Champions are a group of faculty and staff who work to promote positive culture through activities sponsored throughout the year.
Civility, communication and culture

| Trust your gut | Acknowledge your gut response and assess your readiness to engage. Decide on when it is best to engage, whether immediately or in a follow-up invited conversation. Sometimes you have to address the situation right then and there. Moving through these steps happens very rapidly. |
| De-personalize | Reflect in the incident. What is the fundamental issue for you, what are competing interests and alternative points of view, and what are some possible solutions that all may benefit from? While reflecting, embody principles of healthy communication—remaining aware of your emotional responses, de-personalize everything, assuming positive intentions (even if it's hard to see them), consider indirect and direct impacts on others, and align solutions with the basic principles of community. |
| Be positive | Be positive, optimistic and compassionate. Discuss the problem by briefly sharing your understanding and asking the other to share their own. De-personalize the incident together and work together to identify foundational issues, common ground and common goals. Prioritize aligning goals with basic principles of community. |
| Solution | Propose a solution together and explore if it is sustainable over time. If no solution is readily apparent, acknowledge the gains that have been made thus far and decide if/when it is possible to re-engage in direct communication. Time may illuminate additional pathways. |
| Check in | Check in again to make sure the solution was indeed sustainable and adjust course as needed. If there is an impasse, explore options for including others to assist with finding solutions. |
